was a Cambridge girl, victim of the "suicide" mystery of 1916. The dismembered body was found between the two main gates of the burial ground, while Susan Gray's grave is 100 yards up the path leading from the second gate.

The possibility that the body was that of Alice Corbally, missing for months from Smith College, or of one of many other missing girls from Boston and other cities and towns was also voiced by the authorities.

Police Sergeant John Murphy who got Corbally's message about the discovery dashed the word to head quarters and then dashed to the scene in a police automobile with Sergeant Davis, Gallant, Wando and McPherson of the Boston street police division. Motorcycle Officer Altop also hurried to the spot.

Medical Examiner Leary was summoned by officers at headquarters, and pathologist was also sent to the spot in automobiles.

A police guard was stationed over the scene and while other officers were ordered to thoroughly search the surrounding roads, fields and underbrush.

Clanton was approaching Walk Hill street and was about fifty yards from the junction of Harvard street and Walk Hill when he made his discovery. He immediately stopped, he lifted a corner of the larger box and peered into it.

He saw a small, white, female figure when he saw the contents.

DR. LEARY ARRIVES.

Arriving at the scene shortly after the policemen in a car, Dr. Leary examined the contents of the larger box in the same way. Both he and several policemen lifted the body from the box and placed it on a stretcher.

The police were impressed with the apparent refinement of the victim and expressed the opinion that she was a girl of wealth.

The large cardboard box was tied tightly with a heavy piece of rope and the smaller one with a clothes line. The burly bag was drawn to enter at the top with a third piece of rope.

There were few identify marks on the corpse. One of the clues that the police first turned up was a sailor's bowline knot in the clothing.

The entire appearance of the body was that of a young woman. They went out of keeping with the appearance of the victim.

About 150 feet from the spot where the body was found, it is believed that the person disposing of the mutilated body planned to leave the road and enter the cemetery, but went just in and did several to check their tracks.

THE TIME THAT THE REMAINS WERE LEFT near the cemetery was fixed by a report of the night officer on duty who declared that they were not there shortly before midnight last night. Clanton was probably the first person to pass the spot after the mutilation was by a case of slightly more than seven hours interval.

Every precaution was taken to prevent interference with the find, and a detail of more than a dozen policemen were kept on duty until the remains were taken away for the coroner's office.

Two police inspectors from the Division of Criminal Investigation of headquarters were with Medical Examiner Leary when he began his

He also led the discoverers to take little care to hide the articles and they were either too heavy or cumbersome to throw over the cemetery wall, where they might have remained undiscovered for a few days.

Screened as they were by only a thin clump of brush, they were certain to be found by the first passerby after daylight.

The boxes in the rope and cord were closely examined by the police inspectors. One of the two boxes was tied with a piece of heavy and lighter cord, knotted together, and all were tied very carefully with knots characteristic of some one who has learned the art by long practice.

The weight of the larger box indicated that the victim was a fairly heavy person.

SLAYERS PLANNED TO BURY GIRL'S BODY IN NEWLY-MADE GRAVE

This box contained the head, which was not crushed, but which had been hacked from the body of a woman of apparently 18 to 22 years of age.

This bag, slightly blood-stained, contained parts of the dismembered body, which presents one of the most baffling mysteries in modern Boston crime history.

MIGHT NOT BE FOUND FOR YEARS

Crafty, but with nerve that did not measure up to their craft, the murderer or murderers of the girl whose dismembered body was found outside New Calvary cemetery planned to hide their work in a new grave where it might not be found for years.

This was the startling theory expressed by D. J. Ford, master of grave stones and monuments, whose place of business at Walk Hill and Harvard streets is in sight of New Calvary.

Ford's theory was entirely feasible, according to police. In a new grave, whose freshly turned earth could be turned once more into some, dislodged by the body, the body could be hidden with the slightest risk of discovery.

Pointing out that New Calvary street that fronts its way between New Calvary and Mt. Hope cemeteries, is a favorite "far" setting parties, Ford advanced an opinion that the body could have been afraid to go into the cemetery with the road occupied and decided to dig the boxes off.

It was pointed out, however, that the boxes and bag containing the body parts were not deposited at the cemetery until well after midnight. When there was little likelihood of anyone being there.

"I got the impression from the location of the boxes and bag," said Ford, "that somebody had done their work in the cemetery where it could be effectually concealed in a new grave, but that their plan was interrupted."

FIX TIME WHEN BODY WAS LEFT

The body of the woman must have been thrown to the spot where it was found in the early hours of the morning, according to Ford and employees of both New Calvary and Mt. Hope cemeteries.

They take their assumptions on the fact that employees of both cemeteries passed near the spot before midnight without seeing the boxes, and also on the fact that the scene was greater than normal on Harvard street during the night because Walk Hill street was torn up and many motorists were forced to use Harvard street. They reason that motorists would have seen the boxes had they been placed there before midnight.

REWARD FAILS TO BRING CLEW OF TWO

Louise Powers and Doris Mason disappeared in June after a reprimand at school. They have never been heard from since, although urgent pleas have been made that they return to their homes in Dorchester, and Dr. Mason, the father of Doris, offered a reward of $1,000 for information of her. The mystery of their disappearance is revived by the Mattapan enigmas.

case, it is to be determined by the medical examiner.

A pure white night gown and a pair of pale green stockings were the only articles of clothing found on the body. The earliest estimate of the slain woman's age is 25.

Efforts are being made to determine the edition of the Boston Globe of Sunday June 6, in which the head and torso were wrapped.

The hair is chestnut brown. The young woman appears to be of medium height, with dark eyes, and a nose that is slightly upturned. The teeth are in good condition. A more thorough examination of the teeth will be made.

Police believe the woman who deposited the body outside the New Calvary cemetery had intended to place the body in a fresh grave in the cemetery. A definite statement is forthcoming from the medical examiner at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Finder of Body Tells What He Saw in Bag

The discovery of the dismembered body was described for the Boston Evening American by Vittorio Gianini, of No. 24 Livermore street, Mattapan, who found the boxes containing it.

"I am a mason and am working at the Boston State Hospital," said Gianini, "and I was heading just after 7:30 this morning when I noticed a couple of strange looking cardboard boxes by the roadside in Harvard street, just before I got to Walk Hill street."

"I just had a kind of funny to see them there, but I didn't stop to look like people of non-chaudras such as might have been dropped from a delivery truck."

"So I stooped over and took a closer look, and then what caught my eye but the bloodstained potato sack a few feet away? Well, I didn't know what to think, whether I was getting into the middle of a murder mystery or just finding some old rubbish that had been tied up, I didn't know."

"There they were all in a line by the roadside. First the little box, then about four feet away, the big box and just about six feet beyond that, the bag."

"I just had to have a look inside, and I pulled out my jackknife and slit the corner of the big box, still not putting much stock in what looked like blood on the tarpaulin. I had to cut the rope to lift the cover, up enough to see in after I had slit it."

"Well, one look inside pretty nearly finished me. My heart began pounding like a trip-hammer. Just then the quick look told me I was in a girl cut up and stuffed into the box."

"WHAT HE SAW."

CORBETT GIRL MYSTERY IS RECALLED

The finding of the mutilated body of a woman in Harvard street, Mattapan, today, recalled the mystery, and sudden disappearance of Alice M. Corbett, Smith College junior, missing since November 13, 1925.

The girl dropped suddenly out of sight at the college. Her friends could throw no light on her disappearance. A widowed hunt was conducted throughout several States in the East. Rivers were searched, detectives hunted far and wide, but no tangible clue to the missing girl was unearthed.

WIDE SEARCH MADE.

James H. Corbett, of Tulsa, N. Y., father of the girl, joined in the search. Various theories were advanced. At one time it was thought the girl was being held a prisoner. Later a rumor came that she had fled into New Hampshire and from time to time the missing Smith junior was reported in widely separated places.

The mystery surrounding the case grew deeper as the hunt dragged on. The disappearance caused a sensation in Northampton. Miss Corbett was an intellectual. She was a deep student of life. Her studies of philosophy, it was said by her friends, had led her into atheism and a belief in the utter futility of existence. This testimony of friends, however, only served to deepen the mystery.

"LOVE WORTH WHILE"

Despite her intellectual outlook on life, Miss Corbett, so far as could be ascertained, had never fallen into hypochondria. She was not deep, but she was a girl of great

Body Was Found Near the Grave of Susan Geary

By a peculiar coincidence, the dismembered body of a girl found against the wall of New Calvary cemetery today, was only a few hundred yards from the grave of Susan Geary, Cambridge victim of the "suicide mystery" of 1906.

The dismembered body was between the two main gates of the cemetery, while Susan Geary lies buried 150 yards up the path leading from the second gate.

The body was found after all typical outstanding members of the intelligence at Smith College.

"Love and common sense are the only things worth living for," she is reported to have said, and again she expressed her contempt for higher learning in the first three sentences: "College education is bunk."

$1,000 REWARD OFFERED.

The hunt was revived on May 1, when a bottle containing a message purporting to come from the missing college junior, was picked up in the Connecticut River, near Springfield. The message read: "Wanted help. I am at Bear Cove, across High Rock. Five men had me. Alice Corbett."

A reward of $1,000 offered by the girl's father has been advertised continuously. The belief persisted that the girl was alive.

LOST HER FAITH.

Miss Corbett was brought up with strict religious training by her mother, a missionary worker. One by one, however, the blocks of her brilliant young student fell as her college education progressed.

"She stopped going to church, it was said, and finally abandoned her belief in God. She was nineteen when she vanished and one of the

FEARED GIRL IN BAG WAS DORIS MASON, 15

Dorchester police, called into the investigation of the slaying of the young woman whose dismembered body was found today in Mattapan, first worked on the theory that the body was that of the missing Doris V. Mason, fifteen, of Dorchester.

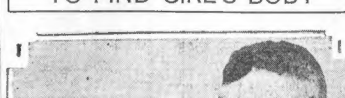

The Mason girl, who is the daughter of Dr. Gilbert S. Mason of Boylston street, Rock Bay, and Adams street, Dorchester, vanished on the evening of May 23, together with Louise Powers, fifteen, of Neponset avenue. A reward of $1,000 was offered by Dr. Gilbert for the safe return of his daughter, pretty, with high aspirations.

A policeman from Station 11, Dorchester, went to the morgue and after a careful examination said he was convinced it was not the vanished Dorchester girl.

The search for the missing girl has spread into several States. Because both had hoped to find fame behind the footlights, the New York theatrical district was carefully watched. The hunt was given added impetus by the reward offered by the Mason girl's father.

laying sideways in a corner. "She looked about sixteen or twenty years old to me. She had dark hair which was hanging straight and bobbed. Her nose and mouth and face seemed to be refined and delicate, but the cheeks were smooched and dirty, and her hair at the front seemed to have been shaved off for a little distance from the forehead back up the scalp."

"The eye that I saw was closed. The mouth was closed too. The nose was small and straight. One ear peeked out between strands of the hair and there was just a speck of blood on it."

"I ran and telephoned to the police and went back with some other men. We all looked into the box but I didn't feel like looking very close again."

FIVE OTHER FAMOUS HUB DISMEMBERMENT MURDER MYSTERIES

Complete diagram and photograph of the spot where a young woman's dismembered body was found, showing the location from which police believe the body was hurled from an auto to roll into the brush and shrubbery almost body, with diagram built on police theory which might lead to identity of the body or to the apprehension of the murderer.

GEARY CASE MOST BAFFLING OF DEATH MYSTERIES

Four previous and famous "dismemberment murder cases" have startled Boston in the past years, it was recalled today when the dissected body of a woman was found in two boxes and a bag at Mattapan.

The first one of these four was the Blonkin case, in which the howling of a dog in the black hours of night brought conviction against Joseph Wilfred Blonkin, of Green street, West End, for the murder of his wife.

In June, 1901, only four months after she had been married, the dismembered body of Margaret Eliza Blonkin was found in a wooden tin in Chalmers Center. The head was located later in a nearby creek.

Blonkin, a fireman, had declared his wife was missing, but when the body was found and identified, he fled Boston, not to be arrested until nearly a year later when a desk officer in New York, to whom Blonkin made application for a fireman's license, recognized him by his photograph and leaped over the desk to make the arrest.

When the trial came up, Blonkin was in a fair way to go free, for all evidence was circumstantial and thin, and even the location of the murder and dismemberment had not been proved.

GIVEN AWAY BY FARMER.

Then a Chelmsford farmer, driven to court and out of his silence by his wife, reported to the prosecutor that Blonkin was the man he had seen on a wagon near the burial spot.

The farmer had been aroused by the instant barking of his dog and had gone into the road. Blonkin asked to be directed to Lowell. Even after he had returned to bed the farmer heard his dog howling. The next morning he traced the woman's whereabouts into the wood, but the body was not found for a number of days.

Blonkin was convicted of second degree murder and died in State prison in 1910.

Second in the train was the Susan Geary case. In September, 1905, which became known universally as "the suitcase mystery," and which baffled the police for a long time.

There was the Jordan trunk case, in September, 1905, as a direct result of which Michael H. Crowley, then a sergeant of police, went rapidly up through the ranks to become police superintendent.

THE DR. ROBB CASE.

The fourth famous dismemberment case was that in which Dr. William M. Robb of Massachusetts avenue, was alleged to have cut up the body of Mrs. Alice M. Wolstead of East Bridgewater and to have tossed the parts, in suitcases, into the Merrimack River at Tyngsboro.

But the original "suitcase mystery," which later spelled out the name "Susan Geary," was the most famous.

On September 21, 1905, Boston was shocked to learn that a suitcase, found bobbing in the water off the Winthrop Yacht Club, contained the parts of a young girl.

There was no identification made, but because the severing of legs and arms had been done by a skilled hand, it was adjudged to be the work of a surgeon.

LONG HUNT FOR CLEW.

Immediately the case became an outstanding murder mystery and the police hunted down to the smallest like task of ferreting out the perpetrator of the crime.

First came in identification of the suitcase with a description of a month went by. Then another suitcase, containing the missing arms and legs, was found near Warren bridge and three rings, which the body cutters had neglected to remove, were on the fingers.

Enlarged photographs of the rings, the first photograph being printed in the Boston Evening American, were made, but although identification had been expected, nothing came.

More weeks went by and then came a vague rumor that a chorus girl had disappeared in Boston from the "Shepherd King" company when the show had been playing in the Hub. The company, at time of the report, was in Pittsburgh.

FIND HEAD IN BAG.

Seizing upon any clew, however slight, the police followed up this one—and then events moved swiftly, especially when a diver located the head in Boston Harbor in another bag.

The girl was identified as Ethel Dorell, or Susan Geary, of the bridge to use her right name, of the "Shepherd King," and it was proved ultimately that the girl had died under illegal surgery and her body had been dismembered in Roxbury and dropped overboard in the harbor in the three bags.

That cleared up the original "suitcase mystery."

Almost exactly three years later, George R. Collins, driver of a horse-drawn cab at the South Station, drove up Frothington Hill to police headquarters a very much worried man.

He reported that he was troubled regarding a man he had driven from the South Station to the New York hotel—and then, at a whim of the passenger, to a lodging house in Haverhill street, West End.

What made the cabbie suspicious was that his passenger had been lured over the route and had surreptitiously ripped a bag from it, leaving the cabbie had not seen him do it. Also the trunk was heavy.

It might be just a disturbed mind that sent the cabbie to headquarters, but Sergeant Michael H. Crowley, a sturdy policeman from South Boston, was sent to "look into it," in the belief that the trunk might contain stolen goods.

The man was found to be Chester Jordan of Somerville, but he was not then in his room. Crowley left and went back later with another officer, finding Jordan in it. He said the trunk contained clothing of his wife, but he was reluctant to open it.

The police officers opened the trunk for him, finding clothing as he had said. But Sergeant Crowley led in a chink between soft floor of each a cut link shot with the gleam of a diamond and he became more instantly realizing that if Jordan's wife had left him, as he said, she would not leave a jewel behind for some other woman to fall heir to.

As the sergeant, against Jordan's protestations, delved farther into the trunk and came upon a piece of flesh, Jordan edged toward the window. But Sergeant Crowley leaped and seized him as he was mounting the sill.

Jordan went to chair.

Ultimately Jordan confessed to smothering with his wife, to slaying her, dismembering the body and intending to drop the trunk overboard from the New York boat. He was electrocuted.

The Tyngsboro suitcase mystery was a parallel to the Susan Geary case. As proved by the government convicting Dr. Robb of illegal surgery and putting him in prison for five to seven years, the story was summed up as follows:

Mrs. Wolstead was brought in by Dr. Robb's office by a Brunswick doctor. An operation was performed. She died. Dr. Robb dismembered the body. In two suitcases, of the type used in automobile trucks, he dropped the parts into the Merrimack from the Tyngsboro bridge.

It took many weeks hunting and investigation to arrive at these facts, and finally Dr. Robb admitted his part in the mystery and added in locating the head. He is now at the Rutland Prison Camp.

North Shore Artist Has Studio in Quaint Old Marblehead House

those having access to "The Lookout," which is the studio home of Orlando Roiland, world known artist. An eyrie perched on one of Marblehead's highest crests, it is rich in works of the Roiland brush, is a curiosity of the quaint old town and commands an unrivaled view.

IT'S ONE OF THOSE tall old houses set in a narrow court of the sort that causes old Marblehead to be uniquely famous. Seventy years ago Mr. Roiland purchased it, and it is a weather gray and not around its front door a tiny formal garden.

WITHIN THE HOUSE corkscrew stairs mount upward at preposterous angles until one reaches the wide glazed-in room at the very top. And such a marvelous panorama of sea and sky and shore as spreads out.

NOT MANY HAVE the magic of open space in this delightful establishment. Mr. Roiland stands high in his chosen field, and no artist is more deeply interested in and more influential in North shore art affairs.

HIS HONORS are many, including presidency of the Allied Artists of America. "The Lookout" is filled with his works, many of which are, quite naturally, seascapes commemorating Marblehead's watery charms.

MARBLEHEADERS tell that "The Lookout" was a pilot's being used as a lookout higher than other town pilots, he could see returning vessels long before the others, and thus slip out to pilot them, turning many a pretty penny to the detriment of his mace.

MRS. BOTES PENROSE, 2D, is a social greeting by Roiland and Marblehead intimates on her return to stay with her parents, the Pater H. Kennebec, at "The Lookout," as they call their lovely old sea mansion in Washington street.

YOUNG MRS. PENROSE, bride of less than a year, was the bride and stender Frances Kennebec whose marriage took place in the stately mansion of the "The Lookout," one of Marblehead's distinctive features.

SCENIC WALL PAPERS, rare and priceless, adorn its walls. There is a magnificent gallery, a stairway with "box" treads and beautifully carved scotches, a secret chamber, and in fact all these beauties of woodwork and architecture are in their home.

MRS. KENNEBEC was born in the town of an old North shore family with tradition going in historic soil. One of the house's modern touches is Mr. Kennebec's library, a spacious second floor apartment, elegant with yachting and World War memorabilia.

MR. AND MRS. JONATHAN BROWN, Jr., of Bay State road, "Red Top Farm" in Hamilton, have closed their town house and gone out to the shore. The wedding of Philip Brown and Miss Rachel Grant, recently celebrated in the Old South Church, kept the town in town longer than usual this season.

AND AN OCTOBER WEDDING, that of Miss Gretchen Brown to James Brown Chapin, 3d, of Newbury, Pennsylvania, brings the family's townward earlier than its usual autumn custom. Miss Gretchen Brown will make a charming bride.

MRS. T. MORRIS MURRAY, a trip to town between European trips, seems member of the Murray family seems always to be a traveling woman, more homelike arranged in tan silk, an ensemble beginning with smart pumps and ending in a trip French chapeau.

ALSO VERY SMART, in black, Miss Arthur L. Derby may be seen now and again on business or pleasure bent. Mrs. Derby wears a coat costume, topped in white and topped by a small close, case-like hat which sets off her challenge course to perfection.

"I'll never be anything more than the best man, either, if I can help it," said Bill.

READ THIS FIRST:

MERRY LOOKE, pretty and gay as her nickname, falls in love with ANTHONY GAINES, a young lawyer.

But Tony is really in love with Merry and wants to marry her. But Merry refuses because she has always been sickle, and isn't sure now that she cares deeply for Tony Gaines. They finally decide to marry at the end of six months, and as time goes on Merry finds out that she loves Tony. She begs him to marry her at once, but he insists upon waiting.

In the meantime Merry's father dies, and she takes a job in a Boylston street beauty shop, having failed in her stenographic course to the disgust of MOTHER, her mother. Helen, the oldest, stays at home to help with the housework. GASSIE, the second oldest, secretary to MORLEY KAUFMAN, a broker with whom she is in love, is the mainstay of the family.

One night Tony breaks an engagement with Merry. Hurt and angry she tells DERRICK JONES, who lives next door, make love to her. Later she tells Tony about it, and then one night she goes out with BILL ESKINE, a friend of Morley Kaufman. She never sees Tony after that, for he closes his law office and goes out to Montana to live. He sends Merry a letter, but it is lost before she has a chance to read it.

Merry hardens her heart against Tony, returns his ring to his mother, and when Bill Eskine comes to town again, she makes up her mind to go out with him and have a good time. He comes to take her to dinner in a car.

One night when she comes home from a drive with Eskine, Jenny returns some time later with Derrick Jones. Mommies see Jenny kiss him good night and scolds her. Jenny, in a tantrum, runs upstairs and shuts herself in her room.

Harvard Scullers Off on Ocean Trip Today

SCULL 1,000 MILES IN WHERRY

Expect to Break Records - In 18-Day Trip From Norfolk to Boston

Planning to establish a world's record for sculling, Edward W. Walker and Dr. Thomas K. Richards, Harvard men, leave Boston today for Norfolk, Va., where they will board their frail craft for the ocean journey northward to the Hub.

The trip, if successful, will cover fully 1,000 miles and will break the previous mark by more than 700 miles.

FOOD FOR DAYS

The boat in which the men will embark on the perilous sea voyage is a small wherry, weighing about 275 pounds, with its equipment, including three days' food supplies.

They will land only at twelve-day intervals, when their supplies are exhausted.

The route of the voyage will keep the boat with eight of land all the time. About two and one-half weeks time is the limit set by the scullers for their trip.

CURIOUS HAND PUMPS

Along with their other equipment Mr. Walker is carrying a hand pump "for the purpose of keeping the Atlantic ocean outside the boat."

Mr. Walker, now 42 years of age, is rated not only as one of the country's leading scullers, but one of the best basketball players. He was chosen as center on the all-American team in a recent basketball match. He coaches both sculling and basketball teams.

LOSES $250,000 SUIT AGAINST 'BUD' FISHER

The $250,000 breach of promise suit instituted by Ada Lucille Schields against Harry C. ("Bud") Fisher was dismissed when Judge Richard P. Lydon of the Superior Court, New York city, ruled she was already married at the time Fisher's alleged promise to wed was made.

Fisher's lawyers were to ask for an order awarding his wife, an alimony.

Portland, Ore., July 13 (A. P.).—Believing that photographs may cause his sons to get false notions of their own importance, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has refused to allow pictures to be taken of his three sons.

Arriving here on a Western tour, Mr. Rockefeller was greeted by a group of photographers as he stepped from the train at the hotel.

"I don't care to be photographed," he said. "I don't want to be taken for a young fellow to start out under."

"You know the public expects a rich man's son to make a fool of himself, anyway. It's quite a handicap for a young fellow to start out under."

TRIED TO DISAPPOINT

"For my part I've tried to disappoint the public a little bit. I don't believe I've quite lived up to what the public expected. At least, I hope so."

Lawrence, sixteen, Winthrop, thirteen, and Lewis, eleven, are the three sons in the party.

One of the cameramen suggested a family picture of Mr. and Mrs. Rockefeller and their three sons. "I don't care to be photographed," he said. "I don't want to be taken for a young fellow to start out under."

COOLIDGE TRIP HALTED FOR 'AL'

White Pine Camp, N. Y., July 13 (A. P.).—White House president was shattered here today when it was announced President Coolidge had deferred his trip to Plymouth to receive Governor Al Smith as a long and cold, on Friday.

After Gov. Smith had announced he would visit the President and officially welcome him to the State, Mr. Coolidge sent an invitation to the Governor to have luncheon with him either Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday this week. Gov. Smith was unable to appear on any of those three days and suggested Friday. The President had planned to leave for Plymouth Thursday, but now it appears he will not go until Saturday.

An invitation to a White House luncheon always has been regarded as a virtually mandatory.

Federal Officials Make Secret Survey, and at Revere the Mayor Demands Action

A drive to purify Greater Boston beach resorts is on today. Federal officials are engaged in the cleanup work at Nantasket, while at Revere Mayor Walsh threatened to call in the State unless the police get busy at once.

Both beaches are pictured as dens of iniquity, with gambling, bootlegging, and other law-breaking activities. At Nantasket raiding plans made by Federal agents went wrong when a leak developed and a heavy fight to cover was made when the tip was passed on that the government was going to raid the beach.

Notwithstanding the failure of their plan to raid every resort on the beach, the Federal agents have completed a thorough survey of conditions and their report, with probable secret Federal indictments following, is expected at the United States attorney's office soon.

It is known, however, that the agents have been working quietly for weeks uncovering evidence of bootlegging and vice. Only two raids were successful in the past few months. In formation handed out, and these are both still in a state of suspense. They were the Gun Rock House and the Plymouth House.

FIND DRUGS IN BOWLING BALLS

New York, July 13 (A. P.).—Treasury Department seized the balls of three years of patient investigation when they seized 162 balls of morphine and cocaine smuggled into New York on the White Star liner Arcturion.

Four men were arrested following the seizure of the drugs contained in the bowling balls, recently found under the innocent disguise of bowling balls and pins.

The confession of one of the men, the largest in the history of the port, the waiting agents was a hauler of square wooden cases loaded, one signed in the Wasserman Novelty Company.

In the cellar of the Water street address the federal officers opened one of the cases and found three cases of metal. When these were opened they were found to contain drugs.

In all 240 cases of cocaine and 165 cases of morphine were seized, valued at $24,000.

The officers arrested four men, charged with being the owners of the drugs. William Vannoy, a former policeman, John Walker and Frederick Bryan.

The prisoners were arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Carter, who had Walker and Vannoy in $10,000 bail each and Walker and Bryan in $2,500 each for the Federal Grand Jury.

FEELING LOTS BETTER NOW

Writes Ethel May Snider Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Harford City, Ind.—Do not know how and taking care of a sick woman proved to be too much for Ethel May Snider, R. R. 1 of Harford City, until she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Overwork had so undermined her health that she had to give up all outside work and when she saw this medicine advertised in the "Star" and other papers, she went to a drug store and got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The took it regularly, was greatly benefited and now feels very much better. Ethel May Snider's experience is similar to that of thousands of other women in all walks of life, who have sent testimonials to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass.

NO man attracts his eyes these days looking for a sweet, old-fashioned domestic girl, with beauty of the soul.

Nothing keeps a woman young so long as a comfortable shoe, a comfortable cushion and a comfortable love affair.

To make her really devoted a man may be, dear heart, don't forget that it is as much difference between an engagement ring and a marriage certificate as there is between an I. O. U. and a certified check.

Somewhere, after you are married to one of them, you may find that the breadwinner's leniency toward the breadwinner's wife is a thing of the past.

"Community ownership of husbands" which once made you look upon a wife's jealousy as "highly amusing."

A woman in love takes on the vanity of the peacock, the devotion of the dove, the cunning of the fox, the suspicion of the lynx, and the tenacity of the caterpillar.

After a few drinks, a man can be so confident that he can sweep real tears at the thought that his wife won't let him keep his toothbrush in the same glass with her.

By Lucy Lowell

I don't want you to manage to do that, means most. It's what you try to do, no matter how often you fail—no matter whether you'll ever succeed, if your aim is noble—that sets your feet on the trail to the stars.

"Do not despair, discouraged or out of humor because setbacks follow short of success in some direction," said Marcus Aurelius. "If you happen to be beaten, return to the charge."

There's the idea, you see. Pick out the thing that's worth struggling for and keep it before you as you can get it. The more splendid it is, the farther out of your reach it's likely to be. If you're an average person, and the rougher will be the way to it. For not so many are fighting toward achievement that the road is very smooth.

And when you're a little way up, don't let it fall back. Frothlike are laurels indeed, you'll have to have out of them for yourself.

It will not be your fault that you fall back. It will be your fault if you stay back. Don't waste time being discouraged or ashamed. You always can get up to the place you've reached before and from there you can go a little higher, and the time you won't fall so far back.

Remember that no true effort is lost. Even if you never succeed in quite reaching the ideal you are striving for, the very effort itself is the real thing that's worth struggling for and keep it before you as you can get it. The more splendid it is, the farther out of your reach it's likely to be. If you're an average person, and the rougher will be the way to it. For not so many are fighting toward achievement that the road is very smooth.

A small boy went into a village shop and asked for a box of matches. Pretty soon he returned.

"Mother says these matches won't strike."

"Won't strike?" said the shop owner, "why, look here," and he struck one on his trousers.

"I mean," said the mother, "they don't presently returned and with them one more."

"I mean," said the mother, "they don't presently returned and with them one more."

Reveal the Facts

Thorough Accounting Should Be Rendered on Dry Propaganda FUNDS

The Senate probing committee's decision not to go back of eight months ago in having the big contributors to the Anti-Saloon League is more defensible than Wayne B. Wheeler's frantic effort to keep the list dark.

As a confessedly political institution engaged in setting up or knocking down candidates, dragging public officials, taking part in enforcement drives and subsidizing elected representatives of the people, this pretentiously moral body should glory in the fullest publicity of its donors.

It has confessed to spending in six years more than eleven million dollars, a sum greater than the expenditures of the leading minority national political party in the same time.

If so vast an outlay was wholly used for the fullest and frankest showing of sources, uses and results could not fail to be beneficial.

But however used, the public is entitled to know ALL the facts.

Private government is abhorrent in a democracy.

The State Legislatures and the Congress should, at the earliest opportunity, enact laws requiring a thorough accounting.

Radio Faces Self Rule

The radio industry is confronted by an excellent chance to prove that it is capable of intelligent self-regulation—which American business prefers to regulation by bureaucrats under obscure or conflicting laws.

That a great majority, if not all, of the 530 American broadcasting stations now in operation will continue to function as before, regardless of the temporary collapse of Federal regulatory power, is naturally assumed.

The peril to be feared is that unscrupulous broadcasters not parties to gentlemen's agreements may seize upon the present situation to pirate wave lengths and create chaos in the air.

Such chaos would be uncomfortable, but also salutary, for it would reveal the anarchists in the craft and point the policing which is sure to be authorized when the Congress reconvenes.

The recent session's failure to agree upon a regulatory policy and method was not to its credit. Its suspicion of Secretary Hoover had no visible basis of evidence in any bad act of commission or omission by him. It was a symptom of political eye strain often encountered just before congressional elections.

But it will work out to the public advantage in the end, whether the dreaded piracy occurs or is prevented by the radio industry's own good sense.

For this new medium of communication is too important not to be made and kept true to its public obligations.

Model in Philanthropy

The will of Israel Hecht, successful Philadelphia realtor, offers a model in philanthropy.

It leaves the income of a large estate first to the widow during her lifetime and then in trust for benevolent purposes. The trustees are given generous discretion, so that should conditions become greatly different at a future time they will not be bound by a dead hand.

It is the donor's wish, however, that a large part of the income from the fund be used to supply free coal without discrimination to the worthy poor.

Here is no meticulous charity with elaborate regulations and costly overhead, but a straight devotion of surplus money to a humane purpose which even the torridity of July does not wholly diminish.

It will be some years ere the Hecht fund will be fully operative. May we not hope that in that interval something shall be done either by sluggish government or a quickened public conscience to halt the wastes and extortions in the coal trade which bear so heavily upon the poor?

The historian of A. D. 2000 will be puzzled to account for the strange inertia of America in the first half of the present century toward this mismanaged industry.

Before Columbus,

But His Is the Credit

A learned Norwegian translates Scandinavian writing on a big stone near Spokane and learns that Vikings from Scandinavia were fighting Indians on this continent 482 years before Columbus arrived.

He says the Norsemen came here, crossed the continent, left records in many places. Of course, they did, and so did others long before Columbus was heard of.

Mongolians came over, our North American Indians are descended from them. And some of the widely scattered members of the Semitic race came also, by way of China. Their descendants are to be found, and identified, among certain Mexican Indians. It isn't difficult to cross Behring Straits.

Columbus, however, made the real discovery, and will not lose the credit even though it should be shown that some people came here less than twenty years after the Ark landed on Mount Ararat.

A Day of Prayer

Pope Pius Appoints the Day

Mexico, continuing strict regulation of religious exercises, has closed the College Teotihuacan, dismissing 400 girl pupils on the ground that the institution had violated the Constitutional clause forbidding religious instruction.

Pope Pius, through Cardinal Gasparri, Papal Secretary of State, appoints August 1st for a day of intercession, urging all Catholics to unite with him in special prayers for the "cessation of the Mexican Government's persecution of Catholics and for divine pardon of those guilty of ordering and carrying out the persecution of Catholics."

Dubious Prospects

By O. P. Williams

IT IS possible that the 1926 vacationist, by an exercise of will power, can insulate himself against the horres of political discussion.

Not many citizens are yet abt wrought up over campaign prospects that they will permit them to interfere with the mid-Summer rest.

The peril lies in that other nest. Where can you find a wilderness so vast or a lodge so remote that echoes of the Wet vs. Dry controversy will not penetrate?

However, since nothing can be decided during the dog days, it would be wise not to let the problem make you too vehement.

GOSPEL ACCORDING TO HENRY FORD

By DR. FRANK CRANE

HENRY FORD's contributions to charity have not been much exploited.

All he has done has been for profit, and he is reported to be remarkably successful. For all that, and in spite of his many eccentric views, he has not received a tithe of the commendation that has been given to men like Mr. Rockefeller.

By many Mr. Ford is held to be a philanthropist yet his methods of assisting humanity are apparently directly contrary to those commonly supposed to be helpful.

He does not give dollars nor distribute charity. He does not run his business and devote the enormous profits of it to helping the poor.

On the contrary he manages his business so that very many people have employment. He gives them work and lets them attend to their own charities.

Throughout the country roundabout he has established factories for making parts of his machines in which the farm people labor part of the time. Many women are employed.

One woman is reported to travel about fifteen miles a day to her work and rarely misses a day. She supports a sick husband and four children, and still has time for her housekeeping.

It is Mr. Ford's theory that it is much better to give this woman suitable employment and enable her to look after her affairs in a self-respecting way than to give her charity.

This challenges the common opinion of mankind, which is that a rich man ought to give away his substance. In fact the Saviour exhorted men of money to give all they had to feed the poor.

The gospel according to Mr. Ford seems to be quite the contrary. It is that a man should so use his possessions as to enable the poor to co-operating with him to support them selves. Instead of giving the poor money or other goods, he gives them work.

LISTEN, WORLD!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

KNOW a woman who henna her hair and uses orange rouge, yet who thinks that one-piece bathing suits are the height of vulgarity.

I know a man who runs a boot-legger's establishment in back of his cigar stand but who will not let his daughter do the Charleston because he has "no use for all this fast, modern stuff."

Do not laugh or sneer at these people. Respect them for they are sincere.

What how can one respect such a silly woman or such a lawless man?

You need not respect their will, but you must respect their rights. You should recognize and respect the TRUTH which struggles for expression in their lives.

Funny thing about TRUTH. We've been enough to recognize and respect it when it sits within ourselves. If we don't like a thing, we are quite sure that our dislike is based on 100 per cent. Rightness.

If we do like a thing we are equally sure that nothing but our preference, but if the other fellow dislikes or dislikes, differ from ours, we immediately suspect his attitude and doubt his sincerity.

If we don't like hennaed hair, we feel that there is something unrefined, and probably immoral about the woman who henna her hair. If we like one-piece bathing suits, we feel that there is something unrefined, and probably immoral about the woman who henna her hair.

"What a hypocrite!" we say. "She henna her hair—why? So just about the most vulgar thing a nice woman could do—and then she pretends to dislike one-piece bathing suits. It's just a pose. She thinks against one-piece bathing suits with the old-fashioned crowd by talking against one-piece bathing suits."

So it goes with the man who helps to earn his back money. The law is a lawbreaker. We all know it. He himself would be the last to deny it. So when he assumes "that we

U. S. Promotes Beavers

If You Have the Right Land, You Might Find a Beaver Farm Profitable

MR. VERNON BAILEY, OF THE U. S. AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT, HOLDING A LIVE 55-POUND BEAVER, JUST CAUGHT.

A most useful institution is our Agricultural Department, and President Coolidge has in charge of it an extremely able man, William M. Jardine.

Activities of the Agricultural Department are as numerous as plants and animals, different kinds of soil and different farm problems in the United States.

This picture shows one new and extremely interesting Agricultural Department enterprise.

The beaver, interesting and intelligent animal with wonderfully fine fur, was dying out. The Agricultural Department is determined to bring him back to life, and on a big scale.

The work is in charge of Mr. Vernon Bailey, enthusiastic student of wild animal life, and this interesting picture of Mr. Bailey shows that the beaver, intelligently handled, is a most gentle creature. This big fifty-five-pound animal had been taken out of the trap, designed by Mr. Bailey, about an hour before this photograph was taken.

Already the animal discovering that his strange captor means no harm is gentle and resigned to new control.

The proposition to restore the beaver is intelligent and it would make profitable the use of marsh and other lands all over our northern country, lands that at present cannot be made profitably productive in any other way.

There are great areas along Lake Superior, admirably adapted to beaver culture, just as there are in Louisiana and other Southern States swampy regions well adapted to the profitable production of muskrat fur, which the Government is also promoting.

The beaver, with fine black fur in this picture, was caught in Potter County, Pennsylvania, where the State is restocking streams with fine beaver from Ontario.

Animals with the darkest fur are selected for breeding purposes, and a good live beaver sells readily for $100.

The beaver has one advantage, when you breed him, over such animals as black foxes. THE BEAVER FEEDS HIMSELF. Give him a stream and he will build his own dam, build his own houses, cut down his own trees, particularly the aspen, in which he especially delights.

A good muskrat ranch in the South could be made to yield eight to ten thousand dollars a year. A good beaver ranch in a colder country, on land cut over and otherwise non-productive, should be made highly profitable.

The beaver is a gentle animal; need not bother about him, except see that he is properly lodged. He will make friends with you; beavers are charming playmates for children.

If you are interested, write to the Agricultural Department at Washington and ask for information on beaver raising. A new bulletin is soon to be issued.

WHY YOU SHOULD NOT BE SATISFIED WITH YOURSELF

Are you satisfied with yourself?

If so, either you do not see yourself in a true light or you have too little ambition.

Having studied yourself, you should know wherein you fall short. You have done well, it may be because you are especially gifted in the line you follow.

You have reached a place which pleases you because you are content to accomplish far less than you have the ability to do.

Remember that if what you have to be easily gained you have not reached the pinnacle of your ability.

You pity certain ones of the grades below you, but you ought to be pitying yourself.

Don't cling to the mistaken idea that those who have outdistanced you have greater ability or success.

It is quite possible that they are merely making better use of their time and opportunities, while you are satisfied to stand still.

Be satisfied with self is to retrograde.
